AIBC VOLUNTEERING

THE PROGRAM

The AIBC Volunteer Program is an initiative that supports Registrants and members of the public in contributing to the mandate of the Institute and the architectural community in British Columbia. Consisting of about 20 Committees, advisory groups, panels, and task forces, the program provides many ways for individuals to get involved in areas such as registration, the Internship in Architecture Program, professional conduct and ethics, investigations, design panels, continuing education, and more.

THE IMPACT

The AIBC regulates the profession of architecture in British Columbia in the interest of the public. Volunteers play a critical role in furthering the mandate of the AIBC by contributing their expertise, knowledge, and industry insight to regulatory activities and initiatives. They support the success of both the AIBC and the profession.

THE VOLUNTEER

The AIBC Volunteer Program depends on the contributions of time and expertise from AIBC Registrants and qualified members of the public.

THE BENEFITS

There are many benefits to volunteering with the AIBC. These include professional development and learning opportunities, exploring different practice areas, developing new skills, networking and relationship building with architects and other professionals, and the ability to shape the offerings of the Institute. The AIBC also provides annual equity, diversity, and inclusion training; parking; lunchtime meeting schedules; and catering to facilitate the participation of working professionals.
